Role-Play

Analyzing Influences This skill involves analysis of the dynamic factors of families, media, peers, personal interests, and pressures that affect health decisions.

Have students work cooperatively in small groups. Ask group members to plan and perform a short skit in which teens decide what they will do during a few hours of free time. Encourage group members to explore how the actions of their friends and family influence their decisions. For example, students could act out a scene in which the group convinces a reluctant friend to play basketball after school.
