Exports to Jobs Erhan Artuc, Gladys Lopez-Acevedo, Raymond Robertson, Daniel Samaan, 2019-02-25 South Asia has grown rapidly with significant reductions in poverty but it has not been able to match the fast growing working age population leading to lingering concerns about jobless growth and poor job quality Could export growth in South Asia result in better labor market outcomes The answer is yes according to our study which rigorously estimates using a new methodology the potential impact from higher South Asian exports per worker on wages and employment over a 10 year period Our study shows the positive side of trade It finds that increasing exports per worker would result in higher wages mainly for better off groups like more educated workers males and more experienced workers although less skilled workers would see the largest reduction in informality How can the benefits be spread more widely Our study suggests that scaling up exports in labor intensive industries could significantly lower informality for groups like rural and less educated workers in the region Also increasing skills and participation of women and young workers in the labor force could make an even bigger dent in informal employment The region could achieve these gains by i boosting and connecting exports to people e g removing trade barriers and investment in infrastructure ii eliminating distortions in production e g by more efficient allocation of inputs and iii protecting workers e g by investing in education and skills

Student Learning in South Asia: Challenges, Opportunities, and Policy Priorities Halil Dundar, Tara Beteille, Michelle Riboud, 2014-07-07 For the past decade most South Asian countries have directed their efforts towards achieving universal access to elementary education While these investments have led to more children being retained in school they have not translated into better learning outcomes This report comprehensively analyzes the performance of South Asian educational systems in terms of student learning It attempts to answer three questions How well do education systems in South Asia perform What determines student learning outcomes What policy options are effective in improving learning outcomes especially given increasing demand and competition for public resources Because learning outcomes and skill acquisition in the region are low in both absolute and relative terms schooling does not translate as it should into better life chances including escape from poverty for many more Nor does schooling contribute to higher productivity and economic growth so that countries in the region find it difficult to accelerate economic and social development Governments in the region now fully realize that they need to direct their attention toward improving quality so that students can aspire to fuller lives as both individuals and labor market participants Merely spending time in school is not enough students need to register a significant gain in both noncognitive and cognitive skills if countries in the region are to reap full returns on their investments and generate gains in employment job creation and productivity To examine what policies hold promise for improving student learning the report reviews evidence from large scale national learning assessments and findings from impact evaluations being conducted in the region

It identifies the following strategic priorities for improving learning outcomes in South Asia 1 Make learning outcomes the central goal of education policy 2 Invest in early childhood nutrition 3 Improve teacher effectiveness and accountability 4 Provide additional support to disadvantaged children in early grades 5 Use financing effectively 6 Leverage the contribution of the non state sector and 7 Build learning assessment systems Each of these policy options will need to be integrated within a larger agenda of inclusive economic growth and governance reform to be truly effective
