

Chapter 1: Ten Principles of Economics
Principles of Economics, 7th Edition
N. Gregory Mankiw
Page 1

I. Introduction

- A. Use the margins in your book for note keeping.
- B. My comments in these chapter summaries are in italics.
- C. For testing purposes, you are responsible for material covered in the text, but not for my comments.
- D. The margins in your book are wide, so use them for note taking rather than having a notebook.
- E. The summaries at the end of the chapters are excellent reviews.
- F. Much of the power of economics is rooted in the fact that a single set of assumptions (that rational people attempt to maximize their welfare) and a single set of analytical concepts (demand, supply, price, quantity) have proven useful in explaining behavior in such diverse settings as commodity markets, labor markets and foreign exchange as well as non-market phenomena such marriage, education and crime.
- G. The central features of this framework are as follows.
  - 1. People are constantly confronted with the necessity of making choices - as consumers, workers, investors, parents, and in many other roles.
  - 2. In making these choices, they try to do the best they can, given the constraints they face - constraints of money, time, energy, and information.
    - a. Economists assume that people are "rational," which does not mean that they are brilliant, but just that they act in a purposeful manner--being better off is preferred to being worse off.
  - 3. Their choices are influenced by relative "prices" -using this term in its broadest sense to include not only money costs but time costs, psychic costs, alternative costs, and others.
  - 4. Their choices may also be influenced by a host of other factors, such as religion, social class, physical and psychological needs, and external pressures.
    - a. When we observe large-scale, systematic changes in behavior, however, a sensible research strategy is to look first to see if there have been changes in the constraints or in relative prices.
- H. Fundamentally, economics is the study of choice because
  - 1. resources are scarce relative to
  - 2. our wants.
- I. Economics is broken down into two areas:
  - 1. Microeconomics consisting on individual decision making and
  - 2. Macroeconomics consisting of national and international analysis.
- J. The word economy comes from the Greek word oikonomos, which means,
