

Extraneous Solutions

A proposed solution that is not a solution of the original equation. These solutions arise from the solution method, but do not satisfy the original equation.

Example Two: Solve $\frac{1}{x-1} = \frac{x}{x^2-1}$

$$\frac{1}{x-1} = \frac{x}{x^2-1}$$

$$x^2 - x = x^2 - 1$$

$$-x = -1$$

$$x = 1$$

Always check your answer(s):

$$\frac{1}{1-1} = \frac{1}{1^2-1}$$

$$\frac{1}{0} = \frac{1}{0}$$

Since you can not divide by 0, 1 does not satisfy the original equation. It is an extraneous solution.

Since all solutions are extraneous, there are No Solutions to this equation.

Stability of Numerical Solution of Systems of Ordinary Differential Equations John Jacob Kohfeld, 1963 The background for this paper is the use of quadrature formulas for the solution of ordinary differential equations If we know the values of the dependent variable for which we are solving and its derivative at several equally spaced points i e at values of the independent variable separated by equal intervals we may use a quadrature formula to integrate the values of the derivative so that we may obtain an approximate value of the dependent variable at the next point The differential equation is then used to evaluate the derivative at the new point This procedure is then repeated to evaluate the dependent variable and its derivative at point after point The accuracy of this method is limited by the accuracy of the quadrature formula used In order to improve the accuracy of the solution one may use an open type quadrature formula to predict the value of the dependent variable at the next point then calculate the derivative and now use a more accurate closed type formula to correct the value of the dependent variable This procedure is the basis of Milne's method It has been shown that an error introduced at a step propagates itself approximately according to a linear combination of the solutions of a linear difference equation associated with the corrector The solutions of this difference equation consist of an approximation to the solution of the differential equation and in some cases one or more extraneous solutions If one or more of the latter increases as the process is repeated from step to step the method is called unstable Remedies for instability include periodic use of special quadrature formulas called stabilizers This has been treated in the case of fifth order formulas by Milne and Reynolds In this paper the idea is extended to formulas of seventh order
