

Weather and Whooping Cranes

Pre-Lab Discussion

The whooping crane is a tall, white bird with red markings on its forehead and face. It is native to certain North American wetlands. In the twentieth century, the population of this magnificent bird has decreased almost to the point of disappearing. In 1941, only 14 cranes were living. Although more than ten times as many cranes are now living in the wild, they are still at risk. About half of the cranes live in the wild. Most breed in Wood Buffalo National Park in Canada and winter in Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in Texas.

Scientists, working to save the whooping cranes, investigated what abiotic factors affect the birds. In this investigation, you will analyze the data from one such study.

1. What do whooping cranes need to obtain from their habitat?

2. What abiotic factors might limit the population of whooping cranes?

Problem

How does precipitation affect the population of whooping cranes?

Materials (per group)

ruler
calculator
pencil

Procedure

1. Using Figure 1 and the data in Data Table 1, plot a graph showing how the crane population changed from year 1 to year 16 of the study. The crane population in any given year is the total number of migrating adults and hatched eggs. Answer Questions 1–3 in Observations.
2. Study the data in Data Table 1. Answer Questions 4–6 in Observations.
3. Using a calculator, determine the hatching success rate for each year.

$$\text{Hatching success rate} = \frac{\text{Number of eggs hatched}}{\text{Number of eggs laid}} \times 100\%$$

Write these values in the corresponding boxes in Data Table 2. Answer Question 7 in Observations.
