Please note: Educational incentives such as qualified tuition programs, educational savings accounts, and the deduction for higher education expenses are discussed in LO 5.8. The deduction for education loan interest is discussed in LO 5.3. Education tax credits are discussed in LO 6.5. Because numerous education incentives have been added in the last several years, the tax law in this area has become very complex. There may be more than one tax option for treating a particular education expense. This section deals primarily with the deduction of continuing education expenses incurred by taxpayers already employed or self-employed.

Identify the requirements for claiming business education expenses.

Taxpayers may deduct educational expenses if specific conditions are met. The tax law is silent with respect to educational expense deductions, therefore we must look to the IRS regulations for the allowable deductions. There are two tests related to the deduction of educational expenses, at least one of which must be met to deduct the expenses. The tests are:

1. the educational expenses must be paid to meet the requirements of the taxpayer's employer or the requirements of law or regulation for keeping the taxpayer's salary, status, or job, or
2. the educational expenses must be paid to maintain or improve existing skills required in performing the duties of the taxpayer's present work.

Educational expenses meeting one of the above tests, which have a bona fide business purpose, may be deducted even if the education leads to a college degree.

Educational expenses are not deductible, even if one of the above tests is met, if (1) the education is required to meet the minimum requirements for the taxpayer's current job, or (2) the education is part of a program that will lead to a new trade or business even if the taxpayer does not intend to enter that new trade or business.

Tax Break

Many times, students pursuing a graduate degree will not find their educational costs deductible; however, a 2016 court case (Kopalgora TC Summary Opinion 2016-35) may have opened up some space. In Kopalgora, the court held that the Executive
