

SPECIAL SENSES

The body's sensory receptors react to stimuli or changes occurring both within the body and in the external environment. When triggered, these receptors send nerve impulses along afferent pathways to the brain for interpretation, thus allowing the body to sense and adjust to changing conditions so that homeostasis may be maintained.

The principal receptors of general sensations that occur in touch—pressure, pain, temperature changes, and muscle movements—are widely distributed in the body. These are considered in Chapter 7. In contrast, receptors of the special senses—sight, hearing, equilibrium, smell, and taste—exist in the head and in many cases are quite complex. The structure and function of the special sense organs are the subjects of the sections within this chapter.
