

The Politics of War

Allied military efforts were accompanied by a series of important international meetings on the political objectives of the war. In January 1943 at Casablanca, Morocco, an Anglo-American conference decided that no peace would be concluded with the Axis and its Balkan satellites except on the basis of "unconditional surrender." This term, insisted upon by Roosevelt, sought to assure the people of all the fighting nations that no separate peace negotiations would be carried on with representatives of Fascism and Nazism and there would be no compromise of the war's idealistic objectives. Axis propagandists, of course, used it to assert that the Allies were engaged in a war of extermination.

At Cairo, in November 1943, Roosevelt and Churchill met with Nationalist Chinese leader Chiang Kai-shek to agree on terms for Japan, including the relinquishment of gains from past aggression. At Tehran, shortly afterward, Roosevelt, Churchill, and Soviet leader Joseph Stalin made basic agreements on the postwar occupation of Germany and the establishment of a new international organization, the United Nations.

2. Which of the following did not meet in Cairo to discuss terms for Japan?

 - c. Joseph Stalin

In February 1945, the three Allied leaders met again at Yalta (now in Ukraine), with victory seemingly secure. There, the Soviet Union secretly agreed to enter the war against Japan three months after the surrender of Germany. In return, the USSR would gain effective control of Manchuria and receive the Japanese Kurile Islands as well as the southern half of Sakhalin Island. The eastern boundary of Poland was set roughly at the Curzon line of 1919, thus giving the USSR half its prewar territory. Discussion of reparations to be collected from Germany - payment demanded by Stalin and opposed by Roosevelt and Churchill - was inconclusive. Specific arrangements were made concerning Allied occupation in Germany and the trial and punishment of war criminals. Also at Yalta it

Domestic Politics and War Jack S. Levy, University of Minnesota. Institute of International Studies, 1987 The Politics of War Trauma Jolande Withuis, Annet Mooij, 2010 This study compares the policies and attitudes toward the health consequences of World War II in eleven European countries Austria Belgium Denmark East Germany France Italy Luxembourg the Netherlands Norway Poland and West Germany It shows the remarkably asynchronous development in these countries of health care financing and treatment for war survivors and of the patients perception of their own health Using an innovative and multidisciplinary approach Withuis and Mooij analyze postwar health care in the context of the European political climate at that time Emotions, Politics and War Linda Åhäll, Thomas Gregory, 2015-07-03 A growing number of scholars have sought to re centre emotions in our study of international politics however an overarching book on how emotions matter to the study of politics and war is yet to be published This volume is aimed at filling that gap proceeding from the assumption that a nuanced understanding of emotions can only enhance our engagement with contemporary conflict and war Providing a range of perspectives from a diversity of methodological approaches on the conditions maintenance and interpretation of emotions the contributors interrogate the multiple ways in which emotions function and matter to the study of global politics Accordingly the innovative contribution of this volume is its specific engagement with the role of emotions and constitution of emotional subjects in a range of different contexts of politics and war including the gendered nature of war and security war traumas post conflict reconstruction and counterinsurgency operations Looking at how we analyse emotions in war why it matters and what emotions do in global politics this volume will be of interest to students and scholars of critical security studies and international relations alike The Politics of this war, 1969 War as an Instrument of Policy Gabriel Siunu, 2021-09 Academic Paper from the year 2021 in the subject Politics International Politics General and Theories grade A language English abstract War as an Instrument of Policy examines the principles of war and how they may apply to the method of decision making in the higher realms of government when military and civilian leaders meet It begins with an exploration of the emergence of a new kind of limited war beginning with the Vietnam conflict and discusses the principles of war along with typical military theory and strategy to clearly provide an understanding of the thought processes and actions behind the conducting of a war Two contemporary examples the Gulf War in 1990 and the South African invasion of Angola in 1987 provide the opportunity to examine the process of military decision making on every level in these conflicts Finally methods of successfully and carefully employing a military methodology of decision making to capitalize on the success of war are suggested War and Change in World Politics

The War Potential of Nations Klaus Knorr, 1979

Fair and Unfair Wars Klem Ryan, 2012 The thesis examines a normative account of war which seeks to regulate warfare through the mechanism of conventions based on equality and reciprocity between combatants what is termed the regular war paradigm It is a view that contrasts sharply with classical just war theory which rejects the idea of combatant equality The history of normative thinking about war has often seen the two views become intertwined resulting in deep tensions in a number of the central arguments within contemporary normative theories of war There are two main themes to the thesis first the continued relevance of the ideas and critiques of the regular war paradigm of limited war and second the normative significance of the changing character of contemporary warfare which represents both a challenge to but also reiterates the importance of the regular war approach The essence of the argument of the thesis is that developing mechanisms for regulating the conduct of war is an important task of normative theories of war and that we therefore have to understand how and when institutions and practices which regulate war operate effectively The regular war paradigm provides tools to do this in ways that classical just war theory and its modern heirs does not iii To further this argument the thesis explores the work of several regular war theorists some of whom are seldom discussed in contemporary normative theory It is my view that this has led to a failure to adequately recognise the antecedent theories that underlie much of the contemporary discourse which in turn has contributed to the lack of engagement with the important normative content of the regular war paradigm Throughout the thesis I discuss the work of Michael Walzer both as a point of reference to situate my arguments and to highlight the neglect among prominent contemporary war theorists of regular war ideas The aim is to illustrate the continuing significance of regular war arguments to explore weaknesses in the contemporary discourse on just war and to recast the discussion of the normative problems we face in 21 st century wars I am not attempting to simply restore the regular war paradigm for the 21st century but to illustrate the continuing relevance of regular war ideas and institutions and to provide additional ways of arguing against those who think the equality of combatants in war is morally misguided Structure of the thesis In traduction The Introduction sets out the theoretical debates that provide the contemporary setting for the thesis Primarily I highlight the fundamental division within normative theory between the just war and the regular war paradigms I explain these paradigms divergent perspectives on the relationship between politics and war and outline the regular war tradition s emphasis on developing effective rules for restraint in war The Introduction also sets out the background assumptions which guide my approach to the thesis specifically I outline a value pluralist account of political conduct and discuss the implications of this view for perspectives on conflict and political institutions Chapter 1 The purpose of this chapter is to explain the central goal of the regular war paradigm of limiting war It does so by setting out and explaining the concept of conventional war This discussion which draws on the work of Emerich de Vattel illustrates how the idea of political legitimacy the equality of belligerents and rules based on reciprocity underpin the formation of conventions in war The chapter also demonstrates how the concrete content of contemporary conventions developed out of the military practices of 19th and 20th century European armies A key point of this chapter is that the important role that conventions play in restraining war is based on the assumptions of the regular war perspective This understanding helps us see more clearly how conventions operate but also how they are vulnerable to changes in military practice v Chapter 2 Chapter 2 aims to further explain how the regular war perspective operates by examining Clausewitz s account of the link between the political aims of war and how war is fought Clausewitz s theories are often depicted by contemporary normative theorists as being empty of normative content I however argue that contrary to common interpretations Clausewitz offers significant insights into the operation of limited war through his emphasis on the importance of political control in war Further I also argue that the current trend towards irregular war reaffirms the importance of Clausewitz s focus on war s political character This conclusion also points to the relevance of the regular paradigm for understanding and limiting contemporary wars Chapter 3 The objective of Chapter 3 is to explore one of the regular war perspective s most powerful critiques of just war theory by showing how classical just war theory is not able to provide an adequate answer to the question of how to achieve restraint in war The chapter discusses Carl Schmitt s account of regular war to argue that the just war approach promotes a disposition in combatants and belligerent political communities which is actively detrimental to restraint Schmitt s account stresses that under conditions of political conflict institutions based in equality and reciprocity of belligerents are crucial to the bracketing of war Contrary to the just war view moral symmetry between combatants is a crucial feature of such institutions Chapter 4 Drawing on the ideas set out in previous chapters Chapter 4 argues that fairness is a crucial component of normativity in war from both a consequentialist and a deontic perspective The argument rejects the position Walzer sets out in Just and Unjust Wars that fairness understood as rough equality of capabilities between belligerents is not normatively important in war Contrary to Walzer I show how fairness is an essential component for creating institutions to regulate warfare and as such is a necessary though not sufficient condition for restraint in war The chapter highlights the role of fairness in fostering a sense of reciprocity between combatants and in creating a relationship between combatants where restraint becomes a possibility I argue therefore that the critical importance of fairness is a central insight flowing from the regular war paradigm one which should be seen as significant for how we judge the conduct of contemporary conflicts Chapter 5 Chapter 5 seeks to apply the insights of the regular war paradigm to war in the 21st century by examining the depth and scope of the changes in military practice since the mid 20th century and their implications for restraint in war Following this discussion I argue that the moral challenge posed by new weapon systems such as drones is that they break down the relationship between belligerents which is fundamental to establishing restraint in war As such drones contribute to the prevalence of irregular wars and essentially vii eliminate the boundary between the battlefield and civil society This critique opens up a new way of conceptualising the wrong that is specific to the inherent features of robotic weapons systems and provides a focus point for those who would argue against their use
