recollections of one's life for after all truth is the chief virtue of history My ancestry may be of as little importance in itself as this book is likely to be after the lapse of a few years yet it is satisfactory to know that your family is respectable even if you cannot prove it to be so ancient that it has no beginning and so worthy that it ought to have no end I am willing however that my genealogy should be investigated there are books giving the whole history and it is surely an innocent and praiseworthy pride that of good pedigree I was born November 24th 1825 at our plantation home called Cottage Hall in the parish of East Feliciana in the State of Louisiana My father was a man of firmness and of courage amounting to stoicism He appeared calm and self possessed under all circumstances He ruled his own house but so judicious was his management that even his slaves loved him Though I was very young when my mother died I can remember her and the great affection manifested for her by the entire family While not realizing the importance of my loss I knew enough to resent the coming of another to fill her place My father said he wanted a good woman who could see that his family of six children were properly brought up and educated His nephew Dr James Thomas introduced him to Miss Susan Brewer who he thought would fill all these requirements The marriage was soon arranged and I was brought home to Cottage Hall by my eldest sister with whom I had been living The other children had laid aside their mourning and I was informed that I also had new dresses but I declined to wear them or to call the new mistress of the household by the name of Mother which had been freely given her by the rest of the family When my father lifted me from the carriage he said My child I will now take you to your new mother As he kissed me affectionately I turned away and said I am not your child and I have no mother now I have never forgotten the sad look he gave me nor the tenderness he manifested toward my waywardness as he took me in his arms and carried me into the house I was a troublesome little girl with an impetuous temper perhaps it was on this account that he often said This golden haired darling is the dearest little one in the house and the most exacting My father had a vein of quaint humor and abounded in proverbial wisdom I have heard him say Yes I have a very bad memory I remember what should be forgotten
