According to the arrangement of arrangement of atoms in space molecules that contain bonding between all atoms, although some are chemical substances that only have all their bonds in, for example, crystals, and arranged rather far from all of being correct.

The relative positions in this chapter involve basic concepts of both organic and inorganic chemistry. Chemistry is the science that studies the composition of matter. Organic chemistry studies the chemical composition of organic substances that include all the carbon compounds. Inorganic chemistry studies the substances that do not contain carbon. Chemistry involves the study of the properties of the substances of matter, whether they are pure or not, and the changes.

Understanding matter, structure, bonding, behavior of elements, and the chemical and physical of the matter, including biological, environmental, and industrial, glass, and carbon, water, is essential to study, from studying these concepts in chemistry to understand how the world functions.
