Critique Paper on The Death of the Author

"The Death of the Author" is an essay by the French literary critic and theorist Roland Barthes. His essay argues against traditional literary criticism's practice of incorporating the intentions and biographical context of an author in an interpretation of a text, and also argues that writing and creator are unrelated. Hence, "The Death of the Author" implies that the literary works stand independent from the author who created them.

In his statement that a text is "a tissue or fabric of quotes," collected from "innumerable centers of culture" rather than from one particular experience, Barthes makes a comparison between text and textiles. The reader's impressions shape a work's basic meaning, not the author's "passions" or "tastes"; therefore, "a text's wholeness rests not in its origins," or the author, "but in its destination," or the audience.

The argument of Barthes is supported by "Formalism" approach in studying literary work. Formalism operates on the idea that any literary work is autonomous-that is, it should be read as something beyond the influence of culture or society. It also rejects the perceived connection between the author and the text. According to formalism critiques, literary works should be critiqued based only on its inherent characteristics, including its form.

Barthes' theory suggests that literary works should be approached with an "open" and "unbiased" reader. Therefore, the literary theory approach involves the elements of the text, straightforwardly, the difference between the reader and the writing itself are affected in the text.

Formalism as the text suggests, is a critical approach that values the text as the object, with structure through the text itself, completely. It suggests that the text is not influenced but should be analyzed with other social and cultural context. Therefore, Barthes is a writer, a writer's system that may be created using the grammar of the text. Thus, as form of a critical system, it involves with other literary approaches such as Marxism and Post-structuralism, which also concern themselves with social-structural approach such as the text struggle in the case of Marxism and the
