

that is within the normal range, results show some increase, additional thyroxine is not required.

Congenital hypothyroidism

Onset of congenital hypothyroidism is dependent on its:

- aetiology common, occurring in 1 in 4000 births
- one of the few perinatal causes of learning difficulties.

Causes of congenital hypothyroidism are:

- Malposition of the thyroid and atresia - the commonest cause of sporadic congenital hypothyroidism is early fetal life, the thyroid migrates from a position at the base of the tongue (ectopic) to its normal site below the larynx. The thyroid may fail to develop completely or partially, or development, the thyroid remains as a lingual mass in a tubular small gland. The reason for the failure of formation or migration is not well understood.
- Disorganogenesis, an inborn error of thyroid hormone synthesis, is about 5-10% of cases, although continues to some extent, growth with developmental delay.
- Iodine deficiency, the commonest cause of congenital hypothyroidism worldwide but rare in the UK. It can be prevented by fortification of salt in the maternal diet.
- Hypothyroidism due to TSH deficiency - isolated TSH deficiency is rare (1% of cases) and is usually associated with panhypopituitarism, which usually manifests with growth hormone and adrenocorticotrophic hormone (ACTH) deficiency before the hypothyroidism becomes evident.

The clinical features (Box 25.7 and Fig. 25.4) are difficult to differentiate from normal in the first months of life but become more pronounced with age. Commonly most affected infants are now identified by routine neonatal biochemical screening. Routine tests for raised TSH levels in the blood (using sensitive low sensitive T<sub>4</sub>) and treatment is usually started before 2 weeks of age. There is a slight excess of other congenital abnormalities, especially heart defects.

Early treatment is essential to prevent learning difficulties. With successful screening the results of long-term intellectual development have been satisfactory and intelligence should be in the normal range for the majority of children. Treatment is lifelong with oral replacement of thyroxine, aiming the dose to maintain normal growth, TSH and T<sub>4</sub> levels.

Subacute hypothyroidism

This is usually caused by subacute thyroiditis. Other autoimmune disorders, e.g., diabetes mellitus, may develop, particularly in children with Down's or Turner's syndrome. In some children, Hashimoto's disease may also occur.

Box 25.7 Clinical features of hypothyroidism

Congenital

- Failure to thrive
- Feeding problems
- Constipation
- Puffy, cold, swollen dry skin
- Large fontanel
- Large tongue
- Large (macrocephaly)
- Umbilical hernia
- Delayed development

Acquired

- Short stature/growth failure
- Cold intolerance
- Dry skin
- Cold intolerance
- Fatigue
- Thin, dry hair
- Puffy, gritty eyes with loss of eyebrows
- Goitre
- Slow-relaxing reflexes
- Constipation
- Delayed puberty
- Obesity
- Stopped upper frontal epiphysis
- Detrusorism in school boys
- Learning difficulties

The clinical features are listed in Box 25.7. It is important to realise that these features are not always present. A positive result on screening tests may also be physiological in selected girls. Screeners in both thyroid.

Summary

Congenital hypothyroidism:

- is identified on routine neonatal biochemical screening (sensitive test)
- although patients asymptotically, treatment started soon after birth results in satisfactory intellectual development.

Hyperthyroidism

This usually results from Graves' disease (autoimmune thyroiditis) secondary to the production of thyroid-stimulating immunoglobulins (TSI). The clinical features are similar to those in adults, although eye signs are less common (Box 25.8 and Fig. 25.5). It is most often seen in teenage girls. The levels of thyroxine (T<sub>4</sub>) and/or triiodothyronine (T<sub>3</sub>) are raised, TSH levels are suppressed to very low levels. Antithyroid pharmaceuticals available may be given which may eventually result in the permanent resolution of the thyrotoxicosis but infrequently cause hypothyroidism.

The first line of treatment is medical, with drugs such as carbimazole or propylthiouracil, which act on the thyroid hormone synthesis. Initially, the tablets can be added for symptomatic relief of anxiety, tremor and tachycardia. Medical treatment is given for about 2 years, which should control the thyrotoxicosis, but the eye signs may not resolve. When medical treatment is stopped, the eye relapse. A second course of drugs may then
