

Step by step procedure to write a term paper:

A term paper is a record of information collected from different resources on a specific topic. It is not as difficult as it seems to write a term paper. But it should be planned in advance and definite procedure should be followed to produce the perfect term paper. Below is listed the step by step procedure that should be followed to produce a good term paper.

- 1) Choose a subject
- 2) Hunt for sources
- 3) Gather notes
- 4) Make outline for the paper
- 5) Write the first draft
- 6) Edit the paper

Choose a subject: Avoid choosing a topic that is too general. Experiment with topics that are least researched on. But make sure that your topic has enough resources. Good papers are mostly built around questions. Make clear evidence and arguments to keep your paper crisp. So, use facts and prove your answers for questions that you decide to answer through your paper.

Hunt for sources: Refer those materials that are not too old depending on your topic. Sources can be primary or secondary. General encyclopedia, reviews, Books, magazines, news stories, periodicals and articles are some examples of sources. You can get professional help to search for resources for your topic. Make sure that you have gathered at least ten times the information that your would require to compose your paper.

Gather notes: Browse through your resources. Make a note of those that are strikingly good along with the author's name. Get the appropriate material. Obtain facts and work on them. Compare them with the conclusion provided by the author.

Improving 7th Grade Student Writing Skills by Teaching the Deconstruction of Writing Prompts Mayeen Quader, 2009

Research questions
To what extent will the use of multiple instructional activities impact my students abilities to respond appropriately to all aspects of a writing prompt
1 Will instruction in multiple learning strategies improve my students sense of self efficacy as writers
2 What happens when students identified with difficulty writing responses to writing prompts generate their own mnemonic device about the process of deconstructing writing prompts
3 How will using the instructional approach of teacher student modeling affect seventh graders ability to write appropriate responses to all aspects of a writing prompt
4 What happens when students identified with difficulty writing responses to writing prompts generate their own questions

Research activities
This research explored the effectiveness of multiple instructional strategies centered on the teaching of deconstructing writing prompts to improve students writing skills and self efficacy as writers

Context
The inquiry took place in a seventh grade World History classroom
The study focused on two female and three male seventh grade students
One student was high performing and the other four were average or low performing

Methods and Data
The inquiry took place over a five week period and consisted of students practicing three instructional strategies the Mnemonic Device Teacher Student Modeling and Question Generation
Students were first given an introduction to a mnemonic device created to assist them with remembering essential steps of deconstructing writing prompts
They were required to generate a mnemonic song in order to memorize this process
Students utilized this mnemonic device to deconstruct two daily opener activities and write appropriate responses
Student work was analyzed using a rubric emphasized throughout the intervention
Students learned to identify various aspects of questions
They also learned how to recognize the tasks included in writing prompt questions
This knowledge facilitated the organization of their thought process and helped them construct well written responses
This process to deconstruct writing prompts was emphasized throughout the intervention
Students completed a few worksheets illustrating their thought processes when deconstructing writing prompts

Observation data were collected through an audio recording and field notes were collected as well
Students practiced generating writing prompt questions to well written writing prompt responses and finally participated in an assessment responding to four separate writing prompt questions and to a questionnaire
To determine the results of the inquiry I asked students to respond to similar Warm Up responses prior to and after the intervention

Results
The findings suggest that explicit instruction in the deconstruction of writing prompts improved students written responses and self efficacy as writers
However there were many unexplained discrepancies
For example each time certain responses were analyzed scores vacillated
After practice with the Mnemonic Device strategy students scores vacillated
However during the Teacher Student Modeling strategy the process of deconstructing writing prompts was reinforced and scores increased by 9% the highest overall throughout the intervention
Students scores on their written responses only improved after this and they did not regress as they had before
It seems as if these two strategies combined were most effective and they greatly improved the writing of the students
On the final assessment students were required to write responses to four writing prompts and they scored a 71.5% or C if I were to give the class a letter grade
The first writing prompt responses in the baseline data scored a 54.82%
Therefore this is an increase of approximately 16.68%
Students went from writing at an F level to writing at a C level on their Warm Up responses
