Scientific Exercises for Recitation; And Elegant Extracts From Rural Literature, for Academic or Family Reading The fact has been long apparent, that there has been a constant decline in most agricultural products; that in numerous instances, farms have become so worn out and unproductive, as not to yield an equivalent for the labor of cultivation. The consequence was a natural one, the tenants being reduced to great destitution, the farms were abandoned, and new lands taken up for culture. A few such cases, land in this country being abundant, did not necessarily create general alarm; but when whole districts of country were affected in the same way, when it was seen that thousands of farms were thus becoming worthless - that the calamity, if it might be so called, was every year making fearful progress westward, threatening in the end the insufficiency of the earth to support its inhabitants - verily, a gloomy spectacle was presented to the imagination. To the philosopher and the political economist, this was indeed matter of deep alarm, and requiring profound investigation. Their investigations were attended with satisfactory results. Science, as in other departments of knowledge, came to our relief, demonstrating the self-sustaining energy of the soil to all the purposes for which it was designed, provided we keep it under the dominion of those physical laws which govern material nature. The principle suggested was a simple one, easy of comprehension; the remedial process was natural, and attended with no serious obstacles. It was simply to restore to the earth such fertilizing agents as are taken from it in each successive crop. Indeed, with a small expense and with materials found in unlimited profusion, this original capacity may be greatly augmented. To do this is the aim of scientific man who are turning their attention to agriculture. Hence, the praiseworthy efforts that have latterly been made to dispel the gloom that had been gathering around the husbandman - to scatter light in his path - to alleviate his labors - to augment his profits - and to make his occupation appear to him, what it is designed to be, and what it may be, among the most honorable and useful among men. Among the instrumentalities for achieving these laudable objects, has been the more extensive production of books on agriculture, the circulation of periodical literature, and the delivery of scientific lectures on the subject; and, especially, the establishment of agricultural schools, where the sons of farmers and all others may receive an agricultural education analagous to the education provided for young men designed for the various other professions in useful labor. This is the great enterprise of scientific agriculturists of the present day. The scheme is a magnificent one. It embraces within its telescopic range the welfare of the whole human family. "Farming While Black is the first comprehensive "how to" guide for aspiring African-heritage growers to reclaim their dignity as agriculturists and for all farmers to understand the distinct, technical contributions of African-heritage people to sustainable agriculture. At Soul Fire Farm, author Leah Penniman co-created the Black and Latino Farmers Immersion (BLFI) program as a container for new farmers to share growing skills in a culturally relevant and supportive environment led by people of color. Farming While Black organizes and expands upon the curriculum of the BLFI to provide readers with a concise guide to all aspects of small-scale farming, from business planning to preserving the harvest. Throughout the chapters Penniman uplifts the wisdom of the African diasporic farmers and activists whose work informs the techniques described--from whole farm planning, soil fertility, seed selection, and agroecology, to using whole foods in culturally appropriate recipes, sharing stories of ancestors, and tools for healing from the trauma associated with slavery and economic exploitation on the land. Woven throughout the book is the story of Soul

Before We Eat has been adopted by the USDA's Agriculture in the Classroom program. Before we eat, many people work very hard—planting grain, catching fish, tending farm animals, and filling crates of vegetables. With vibrant illustrations by Caldecott Medalist Mary Azarian, this book reminds us what must happen before food gets to our tables to nourish our bodies and spirits. This expanded edition of Before We Eat includes back-of-book features about school gardens and the national farm-to-school movement. Fountas & Pinnell Level L "Eloquent and detailed...It's hard to have hope, but the organized observations and plans of Hoffman and people like her give me some. Read her book -- and listen." -- Jane Smiley, The Washington Post In her late 40s, Beth Hoffman decided to upend her comfortable life as a professor and journalist to move to her husband's family ranch in Iowa--all for the dream of becoming a farmer. There was just one problem: money. Half of America's two million farms made less than $300 in 2019, and many struggle just to stay afloat. Bet the Farm chronicles this struggle through Beth's eyes. She must contend with her father-in-law, who is reluctant to hand over control of the land. Growing oats is good for the environment but ends up being very bad for the wallet. And finding somewhere, in the midst of COVID-19, to slaughter grass finished beef is a nightmare. If Beth can't make it, how can farmers who confront racism, lack access to land, or don't have other jobs to fall back on hack it? Bet the Farm is a first-hand account of the perils of farming today and a personal exploration of more just and sustainable ways of producing food. South Carolina native, Wali Cathcart, has made it his life's work to teach children about farming and history to help shape their future. Read about how Brother Wali sows seeds each day by giving tours at his historic school and teaching children about farming. When city-dwelling journalist Kiera Butler visits a county fair for the first time, she is captivated by the white-uniformed members of the 4-H club and their perfectly groomed animals. She sets off on a search for a "real" 4-H'er, a hypothetical wholesome youth whom she imagines wearing cowboy boots and living on a ranch. Along the way, she meets five teenage 4-H'ers from diverse backgrounds and gets to know them as they prepare to compete at the fair. Butler's on-the-ground account of the teens' concerns with their goats, pigs, sheep, proms, and SAT scores is interwoven with a fascinating history of the century-old 4-H club as it solicits corporate donations from top agribusiness firms such as DuPont, Monsanto, and Cargill. Her quest takes her from California's cities and suburbs all the way to Ghana, where she investigates 4-H's unprecedented push to expand its programs in the developing world—and the corporate partnership that is supporting this expansion. Raise masterfully combines vivid accounts from a little-known subculture with a broader analysis of agriculture education today, using 4-H as a lens through which to view the changing landscape of farming in America and the rest of the world. Lively, deeply informed, and perceptive in its analysis, Raise provides answers to complex questions about our collective concern over the future of food. When Rory Feek and his older daughters moved into a run-down farmhouse almost twenty years ago, he had no idea of the almost fairy-tale love story that was going to unfold on that small piece of Tennessee land . . . and the lessons he and his family would learn along the way. With frequent stories of his and Joey's years together, and how those guide his life today, Rory unpacks just what it means to be open to new experiences.
