Your Cell Phone: A Line Into the Economy

If you've got a cell phone, you probably get your service through one of these wireless providers:

The U.S. has a market economy, which means that most goods and services, such as cellular service, are offered by private companies. These companies compete against each other for your business. The result? You have lots of choices when you shop for cell phone service.

You've probably seen more than one ad for cell phone service on TV. (Okay, you've probably seen hundreds.) In all of these ads, the cell phone companies are trying to convince you that their cell service is better than everyone else's. Have you ever seen them try to tempt you with any of these promises? Because of competition among all the companies, prices are lower and services are better than they would be if there was only one cell phone provider.

The Official Cell Phone Provider?

So let's talk about that for a minute. What if there were only one cell phone provider: the government? What if the government controlled production of everything else, too—cars, shoes, cereal, and even television sets? In that case, we would have what is called a command economy, in which the government owns and offers all the goods and services and decides what those goods and services will cost. When you went looking for cell phone service, there would only be one choice and one set of prices.

For years, China's only 3 wireless companies have been owned by the Chinese government.

Mixing Government and Business

A true "free market" economy would be just the opposite. Companies would compete against each other with no government interference at all. Not just cell phone providers and grocery stores would be private companies—everything would be privately owned. The police force, the space program, nuclear waste storage... All of it. The government would make no rules that might interfere with how companies do business.

But that's not how it works either. What the U.S. and most other countries actually have is a mixed economy — a market economy in which the government owns some property, offers some kinds of goods and services, and makes some rules that affect how businesses can compete. In a mixed economy, the government also owns some property and is responsible for providing certain goods and services to the public.

The Only Cell Phone Provider?

In a market or mixed economy, there is still a danger of having just one provider for a good or service. It just wouldn't be the government. Ideally, your phone company would like to be the only phone company. It could do that by buying up the other companies until there was only one monster company left. This monster company would not have to worry about competition anymore. That means it could set whatever prices it wanted for whatever services it wanted, and consumers would have to take it or leave it. Talk about a mega-bad-deal for consumers. That's why it's illegal.

Holmes,2010 Basic Income and Sovereign Money Geoff Crocker,2021-03-07 This is a radical thought provoking book which brings together debates that are often kept separate about basic income and sovereign money You might not agree with all of it but it makes big arguments and does so with constructive intent that of proposing alternative ways of organising our economy and welfare states Nick Pearce Director of The Institute for Policy Research University of Bath UK Though I have criticized modern money theory MMT for being too facile regarding the consequences of money financed deficits I welcome this book s advocacy of a universal basic income MMT proponents have focused on the problem of employment Geoff Crocker wants to shift the focus to basic income and I believe he is right We are in an era of transition Employment was the fundamental problem of the 20th century Income distribution will be the fundamental problem of the 21st century We must begin transitioning the policy discourse now In coming decades we will need both employment and basic income policy It is good to have MMT advocates on board Thomas Palley independent economist Washington DC USA Geoff Crocker s book is a very stimulating and provoking contribution to the discussion of how to define identify and finance basic income It addresses very clearly the societal issue of a monetary basic income funding which will excite the discussion beside well known tax proposals and establishes the discussion on integrating basic income directly into crisis prevention and crisis solution Bernhard Neum rker G tz Werner Professor of

Economic Policy Constitutional Economic Theory and Head of Freiburg Institute for Basic Income Studies FRIBIS at the University of Freiburg The current economic system is dysfunctional characterised by crises austerity excessive household and government debt low pay poverty inequality and ecological damage This needs a radical re think and re engineering of the economic system The standard explanation of the 2007 economic crisis is that banks behaved badly and governments failed to regulate But policies of tighter bank regulation quantitative easing and austerity failed and proved counter productive This book challenges this orthodox view From a careful analysis of long term economic data it shows that earned income has inexorably fallen behind economic output leading to huge increases in consumer debt causing the crisis Governments have sought to curtail deficit spending by socially harmful austerity policy The answer is a universal basic income funded by debt free sovereign money which also funds government social expenditure always limited by economic output to avoid inflation This book will appeal to policy makers academic economists think tank networks and everyone who is concerned with the ongoing dysfunctionality of the current economic system
