

Introduction

The interview is an important data gathering technique involving verbal communication between the researcher and the subject. Interviews are commonly used in survey designs and in exploratory and descriptive studies. There are a range of approaches to interviewing, from completely unstructured in which the subject is allowed to talk freely about whatever they wish, to highly structured in which the subject responses are limited to answering direct questions.

The quality of the data collected in an interview will depend on both the interview design and on the skill of the interviewer. For example, a poorly designed interview may include leading questions or questions that are not understood by the subject. A poor interviewer may consciously or unconsciously influence the responses that the subject makes. In either circumstance, the research findings will be influenced detrimentally.

It is often assumed that if one is clinically trained and used to dealing with patients, that this is sufficient training to carry out interviews with patients and others for research purposes. Although there are some areas of overlap in terms of the basic communication skills required, it should be acknowledged that for research some different skills are required. The context is also important, since in a clinical setting, there is a particular relationship between a patient and clinician. It is possible that in this routine setting the patient would not be prepared to answer all the questions in a completely honest manner. So it may well be worthwhile thinking about the interview from the respondent's point of view and considering carefully who would be the most appropriate person to conduct the interview and in what setting. There may be a conflict of roles, for example, therapeutic versus research; or even an unconscious adoption of roles that could affect the quality of the data collected.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Having successfully completed the work in this pack, you will be able to:

- Describe the skills required to undertake a structured, semi-structured or unstructured interview.
- Summarise the advantages and disadvantages of face-to-face and telephone interviews.
- Outline the ways in which different types of interview data can be analysed.

Interviewing for Social Scientists Hilary Arksey, Peter T Knight, 1999-08-25 Students at postgraduate and increasingly at undergraduate level are required to undertake research projects and interviewing is the most frequently used research method Interviewing for Social Scientists provides a comprehensive and authoritative introduction to interviewing It covers all the issues that arise in interview work theories of interviewing design application and interpretation Richly illustrated with relevant examples each chapter includes handy statements of advantages and disadvantages of the approaches discussed

Interview Research in Political Science Layna Mosley, 2013-05-03 Interviews are a frequent and important part of empirical research in political science but graduate programs rarely offer discipline specific training in selecting interviewees conducting interviews and using the data thus collected Interview Research in Political Science addresses this vital need offering hard won advice for both graduate students and faculty members The contributors to this book have worked in a variety of field locations and settings and have interviewed a wide array of informants from government officials to members of rebel movements and victims of wartime violence from lobbyists and corporate executives to workers and trade unionists The authors encourage scholars from all subfields of political science to use interviews in their research and they provide a set of lessons and tools for doing so The book addresses how to construct a sample of interviewees how to collect and report interview data and how to address ethical considerations and the Institutional Review Board process Other chapters discuss how to link interview based evidence with causal claims how to use proxy interviews or an interpreter to improve access and how to structure interview questions A useful appendix contains examples of consent documents semistructured interview prompts and interview protocols Contributors Frank R Baumgartner The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Matthew N Beckmann University of California Irvine Jeffrey M Berry Tufts University Erik Bleich Middlebury College Sarah M Brooks The Ohio State University Melani Cammett Brown University Lee Ann Fujii University of Toronto Mary Gallagher University of Michigan Richard L Hall University of Michigan Marie Hojnacki Pennsylvania State University David C Kimball University of Missouri St Louis Beth L Leech Rutgers the State University of New Jersey Julia F Lynch University of Pennsylvania Cathie Jo Martin Boston University Lauren Maclean Indiana University Layna Mosley The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill Robert Pekkanen University of Washington William Reno Northwestern University Reuel R Rogers Northwestern University

Research Interviewing Elliot George MISHLER, Elliot George Mishler, 2009-06-30 Interviews hold a prominent place among the various research methods in the social and behavioral sciences This book presents a powerful critique of current views and techniques and proposes a new approach to interviewing At the heart of Mishler's argument is the notion that an interview is a type of discourse a speech event it is a joint product shaped and organized by asking and answering questions This view may seem self evident yet it does not guide most interview research In the mainstream tradition the discourse is suppressed Questions and answers are regarded as analogues to stimuli and responses rather than as forms of speech questions and the interviewer's behavior are standardized so that all respondents will receive the same stimulus respondents social and personal contexts of meaning are ignored While many researchers now recognize that context must be taken into account the question of how to do so effectively has not been resolved This important book illustrates how to implement practical alternatives to standard interviewing methods Drawing on current work in sociolinguistics as well as on his own extensive experience conducting interviews Mishler shows how interviews can be analyzed and interpreted as narrative accounts He places interviewing in a sociocultural context and examines the effects on respondents of different types of interviewing practice The respondents themselves he believes should be granted a more extensive role as participants and collaborators in the research process The book is an elegant work of synthesis clearly and persuasively written and supported by concrete examples of both standard interviewing and alternative methods It will be of interest to both scholars and clinicians in all the various fields for which the interview is an essential tool
