

1. I can describe the defining features of Pre-Columbian Native American groups and evaluate the ways geography shaped those characteristics.

Pre-Columbian Native American groups were shaped mainly through geography which then led to their defining culture and values. Cultures varied depending on where they lived:

- Northwest Pacific + California lived in semi-permanent settlements; lived near the sea. Later in 1850-1900s people moved there in hopes of becoming rich off of the discovery of gold reserves.
- Great Basin Region has seasonal settlements
- American Midwest + East coast were connected through the Mississippi River valley trade network
 - Cahokia was a trade center where most of the goods were found
- Amerindians formed confederacies (ex. Iroquois Confederacy) to expand + protect resources.

2. I can explain the effects of the initial European contact with the Americas, including the Columbian Exchange.

The initial effects of the European contact with the Americas were the spread of European diseases such as smallpox among the Native American population. Major disease spreading (largely only affected Native Americans)

- Killed up to 90% of a group of Native Americans in some places
- Europeans wanted to enslave Native Americans but there weren't enough (bc disease) and the ones they did enslave escaped because they knew the land
- Dwindling Native American numbers meant that they couldn't fight back against European Colonization
- Europeans sent missionaries to force Native Americans into Christianity. Result was a mix of Christianity and Native religions (ex. Voodoo in the Caribbeans)

There were many effects of the Columbian Exchange mainly the exchange of resources and ideas between Africa, America, and Europe.

- Europe to Africa: Guns, and money
- Africa to America: Slaves
- America to Europe: Maize, sugarcane, money, potatoes, tomatoes etc.
