

- hazard to the applicator
- effect on the environment

Based on this information EPA decides how each pesticide is classified. It is classified either for general use or restricted use. Pesticides that cause very little or no damage to the environment when used properly are classified for general use. Pesticides that may cause damage to the environment or cause human injury even when used properly are classified as restricted use.

Only a certified applicator or someone operating under his or her supervision may apply a restricted use pesticide.

Certification of Operators

Certification is the way that an operator proves that he or she know the safe way to carry out pesticide application.

If you violate FIFRA you are subject to civil penalties up to $5,000. Violations of the law may also subject you to criminal penalties up to $25,000 and/or 1 year in prison. Before EPA can fine you, you have the right to ask for a hearing in your own city or county.

Occupational Safety and Health Act

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) in the Department of Labor administers the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970. It requires anyone with 11 or more workers to keep certain records and make reports. The records must include all work related deaths, injuries, and illnesses. A report is not required for minor injuries needing only first aid treatment. If the injury involves a medical treatment, loss of consciousness, restriction of work or motion, or transfer to another job, a report must be made.

Endangered Species Act

The Endangered Species Act of 1973 provides legal protection for endangered and threatened species. It also requires all federal agencies (such as EPA) to be sure that their actions do not threaten the existence of any endangered species. If the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service determines that the use of a pesticide may threaten an endangered species, EPA can restrict the use of that pesticide. When the endangered species would be likely to contact the pesticide, restricted use areas can be designated.

The killing of an endangered species can result in a maximum fine of $20,000 and/or one year in prison.

from Capella University Minneapolis Minnesota Blueprint for Success in College Dave Dillon,2014-09-01 Food Safety Culture Frank Yiannas,2008-12-10 Food safety awareness is at an all time high new and emerging threats to the food supply are being recognized and consumers are eating more and more meals prepared outside of the home Accordingly retail and foodservice establishments as well as food producers at all levels of the food production chain have a growing responsibility to ensure that proper food safety and sanitation practices are followed thereby safeguarding the health of their guests and customers Achieving food safety success in this changing environment requires going beyond traditional training testing and inspectional approaches to managing risks It requires a better understanding of organizational culture and the human dimensions of food safety To improve the food safety performance of a retail or foodservice establishment an organization with thousands of employees or a local community you must change the way people do things You must change their behavior In fact simply put food safety equals behavior When viewed from these lenses one of the most common contributing causes of food borne disease is unsafe behavior such as improper hand washing cross contamination or undercooking food Thus to improve food safety we need to better integrate food science with behavioral science and use a systems based approach to managing food safety risk The importance of organizational culture human behavior and systems thinking is well documented in the occupational safety and health fields However significant contributions to the scientific literature on these topics are noticeably absent in the field of food safety Agrindex ,1992 The Guide to Cooking Schools Dorlene V.
