A1)

Often our raw dataset is comprised of attributes with varying scales.

For example, the age of employees in a company may be between 21-70 years, the size of the house they live in is 500-5000 sq. feet and their salaries may range from $30000-$80000.

In this situation, the age feature will not play any role because it is several orders smaller than other features. However, it may contain some important information that may be useful for the task.

Hence, we need to normalize the features independently to the same scale, say $[0,1]$, so that they can contribute equally while computing the distance.

We calculate normalization by:

$$x_{\text{new}} = (x - x_{\text{min}}) / (x_{\text{max}} - x_{\text{min}})$$

the maximum number we can get after applying the formula is 1, and the minimum number is 0. So here is one big characteristic all the numbers will be between 0 and 1.

Data standardization is the process of rescaling one or more attributes so that they have a mean value of 0 and a standard deviation of 1.

We calculate standardization by:

$$x_{\text{new}} = (x - \mu) / \sigma$$

So, when we don't know the distribution of our data or the distribution is not Gaussian (a bell curve) we go for normalization, else if our data has a Gaussian (a bell curve) distribution we go for standardization.
