Retest

Performance on an Experimental Computer-Based Pilot Aptitude Test Battery Thomas Carretta, Air force research lab mesa az human effectiveness directorate, 1998 Basic Attributes Test BAT is a computer based battery that contributes to a US Air Force pilot selection composite known as the Pilot Candidate Selection Method PCSM When the BAT was operationally implemented in 1993 110 retests were allowed because its retest characteristics had not been adequately examined at that point Results from a recent study of BAT retest characteristics mean score change reliability concluded that a BAT retest could be permitted no less than six months after initial testing The current research effort examined retest performance on several experimental computer based tests that are being considered as candidate replacement tests for the BAT Participants were 340 paid volunteers who completed the test battery and were retested after two weeks one month three months or six months Results were consistent with those observed earlier for the BAT First the experimental computer based tests demonstrated acceptable reliability Second most students showed improvement on retest regardless of the length of the retest interval Third in general practice effects diminished as the length of the retest interval increased However the size and duration of the practice effect varied by test content A few tests showed performance improvements for the shorter retest intervals two weeks or one month but little or no improvements for longer retest intervals three or six months Other tests showed moderate to large improvements in performance on retest even for the six month retest interval These results suggest that as with the BAT retests could be performed no sooner than six months after initial testing Pilot Selection Robert Bor, Carina Eriksen, Todd Hubbard, Ray King, 2019-10-16 This comprehensive book describes in practical terms underpinned by research how recruitment selection and psychological assessment can be conducted amongst pilots The chapters emphasize evidence based and ethical selection methods for different pilot groups It includes chapters written by experts in the field and also covers related areas such as air traffic controllers and astronauts The book is written for airline managers senior pilots responsible for recruitment and training human resources specialists human factors and safety specialists occupational health doctors psychologists AMEs practitioners or academics involved in pilot selection Robert Bor DPhil CPsychol CSci FBPsS HonFRAeS UKCP Reg EuroPsy is a Registered and Chartered Clinical Counselling and Health Psychologist Registered Aviation Psychologist and Co Director of the Centre for Aviation Psychology Carina Eriksen MSc DipPsych CPsychol FBPsS BABCP is an HCPC Registered and BPS Chartered Consultant Counselling Psychologist and Registered Aviation Psychologist Todd P Hubbard B A M S Aeronautical Sciences Ed D Applied Educational Studies in Aviation Lt Col USAF ret is the Clarence E Page Professor of Human Factors research University of Oklahoma Ray King Psy D J D is a licensed clinical psychologist recently retired from the U S Air Force currently with the U S Federal Aviation Administration FAA Equivalence of Computer and Paper-and-pencil Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery Tests Gerard L. Kiely, 1986 In order to investigate the possibility of obtaining equivalent results between computer and paper and pencil test administration selected subtests of the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery ASVAB were programmed for cathode ray tube CRT administration Speeded subtest items were presented two ways one at a time and in blocks of several items Paragraph comprehension items which were too long to fit on the CRT screen were presented in three different scrolling modes The graphical portions of items were displayed from edited code created by a commercial digitizer These CRT subtests were then compared with their paper and pencil counterparts using Air Force recruits in a counterbalanced design Results indicated that obtaining equivalence between paper and pencil and computer administration appears feasible Graphical items present the least difficulty Item production for one type of speeded subtest was best approximated by single item CRT presentation and for another type of speeded subtest by CRT presentation of blocks of items Additional research is required for the too long paragraph comprehension items in which more practice with the scrolling may be useful
