

6.3 Effect of Concentration on Enzyme Activity

Consider that if you increase the number of caretakers per number of children, it is more likely that each child will have quality time with a caretaker. So it is if you increase the amount of enzyme per amount of substrate: it is more likely that substrates will find the active site of an enzyme and a reaction will take place. With this in mind, examine Table 6.3 and hypothesize which tube (1, 2, or 3) will have the most product per unit time as judged by bubble column height. _____ Explain your answer. _____

Experimental Procedure: Effect of Enzyme Concentration

Number three clean test tubes and use the appropriate transfer pipet to add solutions to the test tubes as follows:

1. To each tube, add 4 ml of hydrogen peroxide.
2. To tube 1, add 1 ml of water.
3. To tube 2, add 1 ml of buffered catalase.
4. To tube 3, add 3 ml of buffered catalase.
5. Swirl well to mix before measuring the height of the bubble column.
6. Measure the height of the bubble columns, and record your results in Table 6.3.

Table 6.3 Effect of Enzyme Concentration

Tube	Amount of Enzyme	Bubble Column Height (mm)	Explanation
1	none	0
2	1 ml	14
3	3 ml	18

Conclusions: Effect of Concentration

- The bubble column height indicates the degree of enzyme activity. Was your hypothesis supported? _____ Explain in Table 6.3 the degree of enzyme activity per tube.
- If unlimited time were allotted, would the results be the same in all tubes? _____ Explain why or why not. _____
- Would you expect similar results if the substrate concentration were varied in the same manner as the enzyme concentration? _____ Why or why not? _____
- What is your conclusion concerning the effect of concentration on enzyme activity? _____

Aeillo,1998 Seven Studies of Life is an inquiry based lab manual designed for a one semester general course for majors or non majors The seven exercises cover core topics in biology Each study is introduced from a historical perspective and contains simple yet elegant experiments that foster student collaboration and discovery but require individual accountability
The use of several live organisms in a variety of contexts make this manual very cost effective Rather than memorizing facts students learn to formulate hypotheses collect and analyze data and draw conclusions This manual helps students to view the process of science as a practical approach to problem solving as they build a specific knowledge base The authors have given special attention to clear presentation of difficult concepts while minimizing the use of technical language Each study spans one to five laboratory periods Twelve three hour periods are required to complete all the work in the manual but instructors can select specific exercises to accommodate shorter periods The five week study on inheritance is designed to run concurrently with other studies A simple time efficient procedure is used to provide virgin fruit flies Flies are anesthetized with carbon dioxide and ice A separate instructor s guide provides full support The guide includes instructional notes for each exercise and preparation notes detailing methods materials sources and formulae A detailed answer key for the manual is also included The authors of this lab manual use the textbook The Unity and Diversity of Life by Starr and Taggart The

Introductory Laboratory Manual is a laboratory manual geared towards first semester undergraduates enrolled in general biology courses focusing on cell biology This laboratory curriculum centers on studying a single organism throughout the entire semester Serratia marcescens or S. marcescens a bacterium unique in its production of the red pigment prodigiosin. The manual separates the laboratory course into two separate modules. The first module familiarizes students with the organism and lab equipment by performing growth curves, Lowry protein assays, quantifying prodigiosin and ATP production, and by performing complementation studies to understand the biochemical pathway responsible for prodigiosin production. Students learn to use Microsoft Excel to prepare and present data in graphical format and how to calculate their data into meaningful numbers that can be compared across experiments. The second module requires that the students employ UV mutagenesis to generate hyper-pigmented mutants of S. marcescens for further characterization. Students use experimental data and protocols learned in the first module to help them develop their own hypotheses, experimental protocols, and to analyze their own data. Before each lab, students are required to answer questions designed to probe their understanding of required pre-laboratory reading materials. Questions also guide the students through the development of hypotheses and predictions. Following each laboratory, students then answer a series of post-laboratory questions to guide them through the presentation and analysis of their data and how to place their data into the context of primary literature. Students are also asked to review their initial hypotheses and predictions to determine if their conclusions are supportive. A formal laboratory report is also to be completed after each module in a format similar to that of primary scientific literature. The Fundamentals of Scientific Research: An Introductory Laboratory Manual is an invaluable resource to undergraduates majoring in the life sciences.
