

Basic Chemistry

According to the arrangement of arrangement of atoms in space molecules that contain bonding between all atoms, although some are chemical substances that only have all their bonds in, for example, nitrogen, and arranged rather as one type of all being correct.

The relative positions in this diagram provide basic concepts of both organic and inorganic chemistry. Chemistry is the science that studies the composition of matter. Organic chemistry studies the chemical composition of organic substances that are carbon-based. Inorganic chemistry studies the substances that are not carbon-based. The knowledge of being organized, whether they are simple or complex, is known.

Understanding matter structure, bonding between all atoms, and the chemical and physical of the same substance helps us understand chemistry. This includes: atoms, molecules, and ions. It is known as matter. Matter is anything that has mass and occupies a volume of space. Matter is anything that has mass and occupies a volume of space.
