

Introduction

The interview is an important data gathering technique involving verbal communication between the researcher and the subject. Interviews are commonly used in survey designs and in exploratory and descriptive studies. There are a range of approaches to interviewing, from completely unstructured in which the subject is allowed to talk freely about whatever they wish, to highly structured in which the subject responses are limited to answering direct questions.

The quality of the data collected in an interview will depend on both the interview design and on the skill of the interviewer. For example, a poorly designed interview may include leading questions or questions that are not understood by the subject. A poor interviewer may consciously or unconsciously influence the responses that the subject makes. In either circumstance, the research findings will be influenced detrimentally.

It is often assumed that if one is clinically trained and used to dealing with patients, that this is sufficient training to carry out interviews with patients and others for research purposes. Although there are some areas of overlap in terms of the basic communication skills required, it should be acknowledged that for research some different skills are required. The context is also important, since in a clinical setting, there is a particular relationship between a patient and clinician. It is possible that in this routine setting the patient would not be prepared to answer all the questions in a completely honest manner. So it may well be worthwhile thinking about the interview from the respondent's point of view and considering carefully who would be the most appropriate person to conduct the interview and in what setting. There may be a conflict of roles, for example, therapeutic versus research; or even an unconscious adoption of roles that could affect the quality of the data collected.

Research Interviewing Elliot George MISHLER, Elliot George Mishler, 2009-06-30 Interviews hold a prominent place among the various research methods in the social and behavioral sciences This book presents a powerful critique of current views and techniques and proposes a new approach to interviewing At the heart of Mishler s argument is the notion that an interview is a type of discourse a speech event it is a joint product shaped and organized by asking and answering questions This view may seem self evident yet it does not guide most interview research In the mainstream tradition the discourse is suppressed Questions and answers are regarded as analogues to stimuli and responses rather than as forms of speech questions and the interviewer s behavior are standardized so that all respondents will receive the same stimulus respondents social and personal contexts of meaning are ignored While many researchers now recognize that context must be taken into account the question of how to do so effectively has not been resolved This important book illustrates how to implement practical alternatives to standard interviewing methods Drawing on current work in sociolinguistics as well as on his own extensive experience conducting interviews Mishler shows how interviews can be analyzed and interpreted as narrative accounts He places interviewing in a sociocultural context and examines the effects on respondents of different types of interviewing practice The respondents themselves he believes should be granted a more extensive role as participants and collaborators in the research process The book is an elegant work of synthesis clearly and persuasively written and supported by concrete examples of both standard interviewing and alternative methods It will be of interest to both scholars and clinicians in all the various fields for which the interview is an essential tool The SAGE Handbook of Interview Research Jaber F.
