Excerpt from The Talbot Case: An Authoritative and Succinct Account From 1839, to the Lord Chancellor's Judgment, With Notes and Observations There are few subjects so little understood, indeed so little known, in this country, as the conventual system, especially with reference to what are called religious houses for the reception of ladies. They have been so long and so generally associated with the relics of by-gone times, and with the superstitions of mediaeval religion, that all accurate knowledge respecting them has been regarded as more curious than useful, and has been neglected as such. The result has been, that a Convent of Nuns is ordinarily associated in our minds with some tale of disappointed affection in mediaeval romance, or with some fearful tragedy of dark and despotic times. The former awakens an interest in their favour, the latter evokes a prejudice against them. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Excerpt from History of Prices: And of the State of the Circulation, From 1839 to 1847 Inclusive; With a General Review of the Currency Question, and Remarks on the Operation of the Act 7& 8 Vict; C. 32 During the same interval, great alterations have been made in the corn laws, in our commercial tariff, and in our banking system. The great importance Of these changes in the condition of the country, and of the alterations of our laws, in so far as these may be considered to be connected, would seem to call for a historical record of them, accompanied by such explanations derived from an extensive and' connected View of facts, as might be calculated to throw light upon the phaenomena by which the period from the close of 1839 to that of 1847 has been signalised. Excerpt from Recollections of College Life: At Marshall College, Mercersburg, Pa; , From 1839 to 1845: A Narrative, With Reflections The work here introduced to the public is one which, in our judgment, will not fail to interest the reader. It invites attention first of all from those who were in 'any way connected with Marshall College, and the Theological Seminary which shared in its early struggles. It will be read with interest also by the members of the Reformed Church generally, as it gives a his tory of the founding and trials of these first literary and theo logical institutions established by that Church in this country. But it may fairly challenge attention on the part of a wider public also, 'which may be interested in the history and genius of a branch of the Reformed Church of the sixteenth century, in its earlier development in this new world. And we do not overestimate it, we think, when we predict that it will be read with interest by those who appreciate a work of this kind for its literary character, and its able treatment of subjects that per tain to the general culture of the times. This magnificent work traces the development of photography in the State of Ohio from 1839 to the end of that century. Compiled and written by archivist and genealogist Diane VanSkiver Gagel, it also details the lives of hundreds of Ohio photographers who practiced their art, beginning with the introduction of the daguerreotype in Ohio by Professor John Locke of the Medical College of Ohio. "Ohio Photographers, 1839-1900" thus provides a context for more fully integrating the visual, written, and oral records that comprise Ohio's history.
