

Background

The purpose of this research is to investigate the state of ferry transit operations in North America and to develop practitioners' guidance for the planning, marketing, operation, and management of ferry transportation systems. The research is intended to present a uniform understanding of the status of ferries as well as options for how to approach planning and operational activities. This guidebook is intended for use by operators large and small, in publicly or privately owned operations, for the development of ferry operations as a solution to a transportation need.

This research was developed through literature searches of previous studies, reviews of existing government and state documents, telephone interviews with a broad selection of ferry operators, in-depth case studies of eight ferry operators/ferry systems geographically dispersed across the North American continent, and peer review of the interim documents.

The main body of this report contains the case studies and a guidebook. Two appendices provide additional information to support the work documented within the main body of the report. Appendix A provides a listing of literature review sources, and Appendix B documents the results of a survey of ferry operators that was developed and implemented in this research.

Objectives and Methodology

The overall purpose of the research reported herein was to develop guidance for selecting water/ferry transit as the appropriate solution to an access requirement and guidance for operating ferry services.

An initial task was to develop a definition of ferry service in order to focus the practice guidelines. Additional tasks focused on segmenting ferry service types, identifying appropriate roles for ferry service, and spotlighting operational practices to ensure well-operated and safe ferry systems. The end result is a list of criteria that decisionmakers and potential ferry operators can use to test the viability of potential services and operations.

An important output of the research is a ferry service development process work flow that outlines the steps necessary to take a ferry project from conception to initiation (see Figure 1-1).
