

Good Character and How It Is Formed

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

It may be very difficult to determine what is right or wrong globally owing to the fact that this normally differs from own region to another depending on the concerned community's culture and beliefs. For instance in the Islamic communities, it is normally wrong to wear any kind of attire that exposes the body, but wearing long robes and the veils which are considered as the proper clothing for the female is declared good character.

Character can be defined in simple terms as the behavior of a person that determines the kind of person an individual is. It normally indicates whether a person will efficiently achieve the goals set for him or her, be straight in dealing with others and whether the person will obey the rules and laws set by the organization, group or even community that he or she belongs. Character is normally developed as a result of learning a behavior from parents, teachers or peers. It normally relate to one's attitudes and values.

Even though character is learned from childhood, it may vary or change as the individual undergoes different situations and experiences. For instance, a company manager may be very demanding and strict to his or her employees but liberal and understanding to his or her children. Character is normally taught from childhood and sometimes, it may be quite difficult to change the already learned values and attitudes. Individual may be forced to transform his or her character if it does not favor him or her. Take for instance a person who may have been brought up in a liberal kind of family set up in which him or her was allowed to make their own decisions; he/she may find it quite difficult working in an environment where he or she has to strictly follow orders. He or she may therefore be forced to change his or her character in order to be able to survive in this kind of environment.

Good character can be determined by assessing given traits in an individual. The presence of these traits makes a person to be considered as having good character. These traits include trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring and citizenship among others. Trustworthiness implies being honest, reliable and loyal. An individual who cheats steals and is not loyal is considered to lack trustworthiness and therefore lacks a good character.
