

A variety of percent problems described in words involve the relationship between "the percent," "the part" and "the whole." When this is represented using a number line, solutions may be found using logical reasoning or equivalent fractions (proportions). These linear models might look like the diagram at right.

For additional information, see the Math Notes box in Lesson 5.1.2 of the Core Connections, Course 2 text.

Example 1

Sam's Discount Tires advertises a tire that originally cost $50 on sale for $35. What is the percent discount?

In this situation it is easy to reason that since the percent number total (100%) is twice the cost number total (\$50), the percent number saved is twice the cost number saved and is therefore a 30% discount. The problem could also be solved using a proportion $\frac{15}{50} = \frac{?}{100}$.

Example 2

Martin received 808 votes for mayor of Smallville. If this was 32% of the total votes cast, how many people voted for mayor of Smallville?

In this case it is better to write a pair of equivalent fractions as a proportion: $\frac{808}{32} = \frac{x}{100}$.

If using the Giant One, the multiplier is $\frac{100}{32} = 3.125$ so $\frac{808}{32} \cdot 3.125 = \frac{2525}{100}$. A total of 2525 people voted for mayor of Smallville.

Note that the proportion in this problem could also be solved using cross-multiplication.
