

How to Write a Critique

A critique is a short paper, usually about one book or article. First, it gives a short summary of what the author has said. Second, it looks at the work critically. You will need to assess the strengths and weaknesses of the piece of research or writing. It is important to remember that criticism can be positive as well as negative.

Why write a critique?

A critique is an exercise in judging the value of a piece of writing or research. It is also a way of improving your own skills by looking at the way other writers and researchers work. It is a valuable exercise in the careful reading of text that will increase your understanding of a particular subject.

Getting Ready to Write a Critique

1. Read the whole book or article thoroughly – highlight text that you think important or make notes as you go along.
2. Think carefully about what you have read and ask yourself questions about the material. You should try and establish:
 - The main points that the author is trying to make
 - How does the author back those points up? In other words: what evidence is provided.
3. Re-read the material to make sure that you have understood the author's ideas.
4. Try to summarise what you have read. You may wish to do this by way of bullet-pointed notes, a spider diagram or mind-map. Use whichever technique suits you.
5. Think about different points of view:
 - How do the author's ideas compare to other writers on the subject?
 - Do you agree or disagree with the author? You should say why. This might mean backing up your own views with academic opinion, so you will need to read around the subject area.

The following pages provide steps to writing a critique and a structure to use as a guide.
