PASSAGE—V

The overwhelming vote given by the greater part of the public has so far been in favour of films which pass the time easily and satisfy that part of our imagination which depends on the more obvious kind of daydreams. We make up for what we secretly regard as our deficiencies by watching the stimulating adventures of the other people who are stronger, more effective, or more beautiful than we are. The conventional stars act out our daydreams for us in a constant succession of exciting situations set in the open spaces, in the jungles or in the underworld of great cities which abounds in crime and violence. We would not dare to be in such situations but the situations are very exciting to watch since our youth is being spent in day-to-day routine of school, office or home.

- (a) overwhelm our imagination

 - (d) appeal to our reason

20. By watching thrilling adventures in films we make up for
- (a) the effectiveness of our desires
 - (b) the shortcomings in our life
 - (c) the stimulation of our everyday life
 - (d) the influence which we don't have

21. Film stars present situations
- (a) which are familiar to us, the city dwellers
 - (b) which we have seen only in jungles
